

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In one way this PhD work is a testimony to my love of mountains, cultivated from childhood. In many more ways it reflects the support and caring of the countless people who influenced my life and this work.

My thanks go first to my advisor, Jason Saleeby, who introduced me to the geology of the Sierra Nevada. I first saw this mountain range just after I graduated high school, and it was in its high peaks that my love for geology was born. Jason taught me that every rock bears a story worth telling, if I am patient enough to learn it. I would like to thank Zorka Saleeby as well, whose calmness, caring, and unwavering optimism often soothed me.

I would like to thank the other members of my thesis committee: Joann Stock for providing crucial practical guidance, Brian Wernicke for the best geology classes I ever had, and Jean-Philippe Avouac for making the third floor of North Mudd a delightful place to work. Thanks also to John Eiler for his willingness to help out, and to George Rossman for an open ear, his enthusiasm, and the use of his digital camera! Thank you Joe Kirschvink, Kerry Sieh, Joann Stock and Jean-Philippe Avouac for unforgettable field trips. Interactions with professors at other institutes gave me fresh perspectives on my work, and I would like to also thank Basil Tikoff, Judith Chester, Jay Ague, Rick Allmendinger, Jim Dunlap, Mihai Ducea, Greg Hirth, and Nathan Niemi. This list would be incomplete without my undergraduate advisor, David Fastovsky, who inspired me to pursue my love of science at the highest levels.

A truly outstanding quality of this division is its terrific staff; without them I would have been lost. Chi Ma, Mark Garcia, Joanne Giberson, and Ken Ou provided crucial assistance during my thesis work. Many thanks to Carolyn Porter, Marcia Hudson, Michelle Medley, Heather Steele, and Sheri Garcia. Every interaction with them brought a smile to my face. Jim O'Donnell, Tony Diaz, and Susan Leising just made the library.

Many thanks go to my friends, both in the division over the years, and on “the outside” (you know who you are!). I will not forget the great times I spent with Tanja Bosak, Rowena Lohman, Nicole and Nathan Downey, Laura Baker, Natalia Deligne, Lydia Taylor, Chris DiCaprio, Charlie Verdel, Ryan Petterson, Mohamed Chlieh, Sarah Miller, and Yoshi Kaneko. Field assistants Sara Cina, Kyle Bradley, and Carl Tape smoothed out some rough situations and helped make field work a delight.

Finally, I want to thank my family for their love and support. My parents raised me to believe that I could achieve anything I set my mind to. My sister Esther, especially, has been there for me through every crisis, and is an endless source of great joy and love. To my fiancé Carl, thank you for your assistance, your encouragement, and for scaring off the bear that ate my sock.